ACTIVITIES

The little free time I have is usually spent outdoors. I am an avid fisherman and love to explore new places during the summer. During the winter, you can find me playing adult league hockey with the Laborers Union. When I'm not reading my educational textbooks, I'm usually reading material that furthers my knowledge in science, technology and construction.

My grandfather, Charlie Brown, who came up to Alaska from Kentucky in 1956 on his Indian motorcycle, was an ironworker who later became the President of the Ironworkers Union and founded International Steel of Erectors. During my upbringing, he built dozens of commercial structures around Anchorage, including; the tower at Ted Stevens International Airport, an addition to Providence Hospital, several commercial properties that he later sold to his kids and grandkids, and built structures throughout rural Alaska. I was lucky to have him be my babysitter when my parents were working and I had the opportunity to ride along to his projects within Anchorage and watch him manage them. He taught me general construction techniques, electrical, mechanical, flooring, sheetrock, tile installation and painting.
